Back To Bangladesh

It's not a country to visit for fun...but Bangladesh is the most unreached place on earth. It may seem inconspicuous, but it is the biggest unreached people group, even more than Japan! All cramped into a tiny, flood prone landmass— check out the map below!

In Bangladesh, the spiritual hunger blows me away. So when I sent out an invitation to join a trip in November to about a dozen churches in the US, I thought people would be lining up. At present I don't have a single person...

This trip we will be impacting 1,500 kids/youth and mobilizing them to reach their friends. With only two local women on the team we were really hoping to have both a young woman, and middle age woman from America, come to love on all the girls and mothers. Our friends there serve so faithfully with so little and scant help from outside. Please pray for them!

Compare Bangladesh to Russia!

The “C” Word

Of course there are excuses not to go...I just got hit with a big one. I never thought a cancer diagnosis would come this early on but I will begin undergoing treatment for prostate cancer soon. It is interesting that the first line in my diagnosis was “canine cancer detection”. That's right a team of trained dogs that detected cancer from a single breath sample—and they are 90-100% accurate! The dogs can even detect it before modern medicine. And it's no small wonder they still can't train cats to do this kind of thing.

All this has me thinking more about personal attitudes and mindset. How did the cancer start? In what ways do I need to do a reset of mind and lifestyle? How might daily prayer and meditation and worship lead to balance and remission? I am beginning the path to discover...

and I am skeptical of just blaming the genes, even if my family has a history of a whole array of cancers. For that matter, my diet is probably in the top 1 percentile of healthy eating habits—never pop and lots of green tea, lots of fish, loads of vegetables, ha ha.

So, I want to address things more internally...what and how I think, not just invasive treatments. Please pray as I aim to simplify and sort out life more. This could actually be a very good thing!

Building For the Future

Yippee! In Dec 2024 we finally registered NewDayToDay as a legal non-profit in Japan! Yes, about a decade after starting...frankly we had no idea where all this was going!

Our Mission:

Assist Christians to make disciples
Who make disciples
And reach the most reachable
Of the most unreached.

Nu
Tu Day

Much work has been done in pulling together the internal structure and in January the foundation and final board will be established for both Japan and the US. This will pave the way for pushing forward with the Tokyo Dream Center, a hub for Japan and global outreach based in the heart of Tokyo. We have architects coming from Denver with EMI (Engineers Ministry Intl) to establish the plans for the building so we can begin to fund-raise and land-search. There is a lot on the horizon!

It is definitely a walk on the water...without any facilities to speak of, all the NDTD projects are run off our kitchen table. Now with dubious health issues it makes it even more uncertain...and yet with God we are certain, right?

Please pray in October as we challenge each potential board member, that God would lead each one who is to join and also that we have wisdom for all the steps ahead—for legal, financial, technical, and organizational issues that need attention and it can all be done with excellence to His glory. Hallelujah!
